Nearly 200 Dyess Airmen return home after three months

By 2nd Lt. Ben Gamble
Dyess Public Affairs

After being deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom to an undisclosed location for three months, the first large group of nearly 200

Dyess Airmen returned June 5. Family and friends turned out in force to greet their loved ones, braving not only early morning hours, but inclement weather as well. "Having my wife deployed was one of the most lonely and helpless feelings I've ever had in my life. Helpless because, for the first time since we've been married, I couldn't just get to her when she needed a hand," said Master Sgt. Levi Lawrence, Dyess Honor Guard superintendent.

Dyess NCO wins AF finance award

A member of the 7th Comptroller Squadron recently received the Air Force Special Acts and Services award June 2.

Senior Master Sgt. John Woffard, 7th CPTS financial management superintendent, received the ACC Special Acts and Services award earlier this year, before moving on to win the Air Force award.

Woffard

Sergeant Woffard is credited with creating the Dyess FM contingency training plan.

The plan was called the "most comprehensive deployment training course seen in this career field" by the ACC deputy of FM.

"It was a real honor to bring back a pretty piece of wood, but the real satisfaction came when several commanders and superintendents personally thanked me for our contribution to training their personnel to become warfighters," said Sergeant Woffard.

The SAF/FM training manager published the training plan on the SAF/FM Web site and was benchmarked as "an Air Force standard."

"The training gave me a good perspective on properly handling situations in a deployed location," said Airman 1st Class Jose Verlarde, 7th CPTS customer support technician.

Operational Readiness Inspection begins next week

By Senior Airman Matthew Rosine
Dyess Public Affairs

A team from the Air Combat Command Inspector General's office arrives at Dyess Thursday to conduct an Operational Readiness Inspection re-evaluation.

The inspection will run June 18-19.

"All of our scrimmages indicate we are ready to go," said Col. Jonathan George, 7th Bomb Wing commander. "We are one of a few teams that gets to go to the Super Bowl twice in a row. There's no doubt we are ready for the opening kickoff."

The follow-up inspection gives the IG team a chance to re-evaluate Dyess' ability to generate aircraft and test its mobility process. The previous inspection was Jan. 21-26.

During the January ORI, The ACC IG team spent seven days evaluating the wing's ability to generate B-1 aircraft to support a simulated Pacific Theater contingency tasking. In addition to aircraft, 716 personnel and more than 438 short tons of cargo were "deployed" using 14 notional charter and military airlift chalks to support simulated wartime missions.

The 7th Bomb Wing successfully passed almost all of the 35 inspected areas and received an outstanding rating -- the highest score available -- in 13 of those areas and was rated excellent or satisfactory in 18 others.

and a play area will be set up for kids.

Daniels has donated his time for the performance, which is presented by the "Spirit of America Tour," a non-profit organization that brings volunteer, headline entertainers to U.S. domestic military bases.

The tour specifically plays free shows for members of the military as a way of thanking them for their service to the country.

Daniels is best known for his 1979 hit song, "The Devil Went Down to Georgia," as well as "Uneasy Rider," "The South's Gonna Do It," "Still in Saigon," and "Long Haired Country Boy."

Mentorship means taking some risks, caring at core

By Maj. Mark Janicki
7th Maintenance Operations Squadron

By dictionary definition, a mentor is a "close, trusted and experienced counselor or guide." A mentor is further defined as a "teacher, tutor and coach." Mentorship is defined as the "influence, guidance or direction exerted by a mentor."

The story of the mentor comes from Homer's "Odyssey." When Odysseus, King of Ithaca, went to fight in the Trojan War, he entrusted the care of his household to Mentor, who served as teacher and overseer of Odysseus's son, Telemachus.

After the war, Odysseus was condemned to wander vainly for ten years in his attempt to return home. In time, Telemachus, now grown, went in search of his father. Telemachus was accompanied on his quest by Athena, goddess of war and patroness of the arts and industry, who assumed the form of Mentor.

Eventually, father and son were reunited and together they cast down would-be usurpers of Odysseus's throne and of Telemachus' birthright. In time, the word mentor became synonymous with trusted advisor, friend, teacher and wise person.

Modern use of mentor refers to an experienced, senior leader or manager who develops younger, less experienced leaders and provides career counseling and sponsorship to these individuals.

This concept is probably nothing new to anyone who has been a supervisor in the Air Force for any length of time. At least it shouldn't be. We have been lectured on the need to be mentors to our younger troops for years. The most common complaint about this is either "I already do mentor my troops so why the constant harping" or "I don't have the time to take such personal interest."

The first complaint has some merit in that no matter how active or inactive a mentor you are, you are providing an example to your troops be it positive or negative. However, there is always room for improvement -- hence the harping. The second statement is totally off base, just refer back to statement one.

We are always providing mentorship in one form or another, be it leadership by example, or direct counseling or teaching. We do it everyday without realizing we are doing it. To ensure we are doing it right, it is important we realize the messages we are sending out to our troops. That is why the Air Force asks us to formalize our mentorship programs and study the various methods of providing mentorship.

Mentoring is easy, doing it right and with direction is what is hard. The first step is taking an interest in the success of your troops and realizing how your knowledge and experience can help them. If you took the time to read this article then you most likely have that interest, and I hope you find something useful, even if only confirmation you're on the right track.

We have covered familiar ground as to why it is important to be a mentor, but how can we improve or mentorship approach?

Technology of course.

We live in the Internet Age. If you have a question on practically anything, an answer is as close as your computer screen. There are entire courses on mentorship practices free to anyone with the will to type in an internet address. Take the plunge. The Air Force, your troops and you will be better for the efforts you make.

I end with some very good advice I found during my research and will list at the bottom one of the best sites on mentoring I have found.

Mentorship is a two-way street. The mentor must be willing to share knowledge, training and experience in a trusted and respected atmosphere.

In turn, the individual receiving the mentorship must trust and respect the mentor, while being open and receptive to the process. Caring is the core of mentorship. A mentor may care as a parent cares. Mentors risk disappointment, failure and rejection. This should never be a reason to give up.

We must remember that mentorship means taking some risks, to include allowing our protégés to make mistakes during their training. Without the proper command climate, mentorship can not be practiced.

We owe it to our young NCOs, officers and airmen to clarify their career goals and help develop long term career strategies toward advancement. We should also aid in developing their short term career plans. We must share our knowledge and instruct them in technical, leadership and management skills. We should also provide personal and job counseling where appropriate.

Above all, senior managers must be role models. That is what mentorship is all about. We must all contribute in the development of those who will come after us. (The previous excerpt was written Dave Welsh in March 1991 while a student at the Master Warrant Officer Training Course).

This, together with your own experience and interpersonal skills, will make an unbeatable combination. Remember, just take an interest. For more advice on mentoring and mentorship programs, please try <http://www.mentors.ca/mentorlinks.html#calif>.

Effective leadership requires decisive, correct action

By Lt. Col. David Miller
317th Operations Support Squadron commander

"When faced with an unfamiliar situation in combat, do something -- anything -- people are counting on you!"

-- Retired Col. John H. Pedigo, World War II P-47 pilot, 1st Fighter Group

I first heard those words from a friend and mentor 20 years ago while I was a cadet at the Air Force Academy.

I finally learned what they meant on a dark and dusty landing zone in northern Afghanistan in January of 2002.

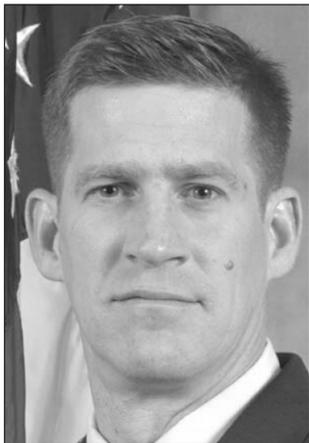

Captain T's crew was handpicked to fly the first aircraft into an austere landing zone for an urgent pick-up of Taliban prisoners and their Army escorts. I flew as his copilot that night.

The "runway" for this mission would be a 4,000 by 90-foot dirt taxiway that had recently been surveyed by a team of special operators.

It was the only clear area remaining on the airfield following highly effective coalition air strikes during the previous weeks.

Mission considerations required the normally nimble C-130 (yes, I'm a "Herk-driver") to be so heavily laden with fuel that it exceeded the recommended assault landing weight by more than 25 percent.

Captain T's first indication that all was not quite as it should be came on landing rollout when he attempted a 180-degree turn to position the craft for passenger upload and a quick departure.

Halfway through the turn, the plane tilted then lumbered to a halt with the left outboard propeller way too close to the ground.

The tires had punched through the topsoil sinking the aircraft nearly to the axles.

Now what?

No tow vehicles around. No way to call for a recovery crew, and the only usable landing surface was blocked by his aircraft.

Spending the night in hostile territory seemed unappealing.

Drawing on all his experience and knowledge of his aircraft, Captain T opted to rock his plane out of the sand in much the same way you might work your car out of a ditch or a snow bank -- using maximum forward and reverse thrust.

After several noisy, sand-choked attempts, it worked and the crew proceeded with the upload.

Fast forward to the departure roll. Powered up and rolling for takeoff, the crew noted minimum acceptable acceleration as the aircraft "plowed" its way down the soft runway. As the end of the runway rapidly approached it became apparent that the aircraft would not reach computed "flying speed" in time.

Decision time again. Try to stop and we will end up off the runway, in rough terrain and a potential fireball. Proceed with the takeoff and we probably won't fly.

In a phenomenal display of airmanship, Captain T gingerly coaxed the Herk into the air and managed to accelerate to flying airspeed by taking advantage of a phenomenon known as aerodynamic ground effect.

Apparently, he had been paying attention during his pilot training aero class -- another great call.

Under the worst possible conditions, Captain T drew on a career's worth of knowledge and experiences to lead his crew to a successful mission outcome.

His ability to "do something" when something had to be done made the difference -- perhaps between life and death -- for his passengers and crew. He did not get to pick the time or place for his performance of a lifetime.

They were chosen for him. But make no mistake, he was not lucky -- he was ready.

What about you, fellow Airman?

Have you, like Captain T, taken advantage of every opportunity to get ready for your moment?

Are you waiting for more stripes, more brass on your shoulder, more responsibility or higher stakes before you start seriously preparing?

Whether you're leading a shift, a shop or a ship when your moment comes, we're counting on you, like so many Airmen who came before you, to do the right "something."

Two Dyess B-1s and 71 people were deployed to Cold Lake, Canada, in 1996 to participate in a multi-force integration exercise called Maple Flag.

While there, B-1 bombers and crewmembers flew along side fighter aircraft from Canada and Germany. Additionally, other aircraft and crews from the U.S. Air Force and Navy participated.

AEF deployments up to 120 days

By Staff Sgt. C. Todd Lopez
Air Force Print News

WASHINGTON -- Most Airmen scheduled to deploy in upcoming air and space expeditionary force packages will see their orders expand from 90 to 120 days.

The change in deployment length will begin with AEF cycle 5 in September. Those who deploy as part of AEF 1 and 2 should prepare for a 120-day deployment.

Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. John P. Jumper announced the change in his "Sight Picture" June 4.

The reason for the change is that the requirement for deployable forces is not expected to decrease in the foreseeable future, he said.

"Simply put, the demands on our deployable forces have not diminished and are not expected to decline for some time," the general said. "Further, the Air Force component commander in the U.S. Central Command area of operations has asked us to deploy people for longer tour lengths to allow greater continuity for expeditionary commanders in the field."

To help extend tour lengths to 120 days, the entire AEF cycle was adjusted. The new cycle, now 20 months in length, allows for a four-month eligibility window and a 16-month training window.

General Jumper also said he intends to increase the pool of Airmen eligible for deployment.

Currently, the Air Force has about 272,000 Airmen earmarked as deployment-eligible.

"I have asked all of our major commands to aggressively review the assumptions upon which they exclude Airmen from our AEFs and take immediate steps to maximize those postured (for deployment)," the general said.

The changes to the AEF cycle, while possibly difficult for some, should be considered by all Airmen as part of their commitment to the Air Force, General Jumper said.

"Let me be perfectly clear -- in our Air Force, every Airman is expeditionary, every Airman will know (his or her) place in the AEF system, and every Airman will be prepared to support the combatant commander, whether deployed, in (the continental United States) via reachback or employed at home station," General Jumper said.

Airmen currently deployed as part of AEF 7 and 8 and AEF 9 and 10 will still be held to the 90-day deployment schedule.

AF officials remind Airmen to register to vote

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas -- General elections are approaching and Air Force voting officials at the Air Force Personnel Center are reminding everyone to register to vote.

Department of Defense officials recently announced they have worked out a plan with the U.S. Postal Service to get absentee ballots to servicemembers overseas faster, but registering to vote is the first step to getting a ballot.

"Getting registered to vote is not a difficult process, it's just a matter of making it a priority," said Lt. Col. Lee Shick, an Air Force voting action officer.

Deadlines and state-specific rules on voter registration can be found on the Federal Voting Assistance Program Web site at www.fvap.gov.

The site includes a list of 10 things to do to ensure a person's vote counts.

"Our goal is 100-percent contact with every Airman by a voting representative," Colonel Shick said. "The opportunity to vote has been emphasized as a command responsibility and our installation voting officers play a key role."

"We want to make sure each individual gets the word about voting and that they have the tools and information to apply for an absentee ballot and vote," he said. "If Airmen can't get registered online, installation voting officers will have a supply of federal postcard applications."

Air Force expands space-A lodging window

RANDOLPH AIR FORCE BASE, Texas -- Officials from the Air Force Services Agency recently announced an expanded space-available reservation policy designed to maximize occupancy at lodging facilities. Under the new system, lodging officials can accept and confirm space-A lodging reservations up to 30 days in advance based on low projected occupancy rates, said Arthur Myers, AFSVA director.

The window for reservations decreases as the percentage of projected occupancy rises. For example, when a projected occupancy rate is 65 percent or less, space-A guests can make reservations up to 30 days in advance. At 80 percent, the reservation window is two weeks. It is seven days for 85 percent, and three days for 86 percent or greater.

Under this new system, higher priority customers may not bump space-A customers with confirmed reservations, Mr. Myers said. Neither can they be bumped once they are assigned lodging except during contingencies, emergencies or when the installation commander determines higher priorities exist. Library help needed

The base library is currently looking for part-time help. Interested applicants will work approximately 18 hours per week through June and July. For more information, call Calvin Earthly at 696-1508.

Position opening

The 7th Civil Engineer Squadron, central dormitory management office has an opening for a staff sergeant-level dormitory manager. Interested applicants must have exceptional communications skills and be a mentor to dorm residents, knowledgeable in Microsoft programs, able to work alone, yet have excellent supervisory skills. The applicant must possess a five skill level and be releasable from their primary Air Force Specialty Code with a report no later than date of June 21. Applicants must get permission from their squadron commander and functional manager at Air Force Personnel Center to be released from their AFSC before applying. Interested applicants need to fill out 9D000 application and e-mail Master Sgt. Nancy Vallance or call her at 696-5524.

Fandangle special

The Fort Griffin Fandangle is offering a military special for Dyess members during the upcoming Fandangles June 18-20 and 26-27 in Albany, Texas.

The Fandangle is a live reenactment of the frontier days of the Wild West featuring singing, dancing and pantomime. The event will feature free parking and free programs. The event will also feature a parade, barbecue and calliope concert.

For more information, call toll free 1-877-762-2525. People can also visit the event Web site at www.fortgriffin-fandangle.org.

The wing "came up short" in only four areas.

Those ratings require a re-evaluation of that part of the inspection within 90 to 150 days.

A Prepare to Deploy Order will begin the inspection. At that time, Dyess troops will begin getting equipment, personnel and aircraft ready to deploy. The wing will then conduct a personnel recall.

During the inspection, people are reminded:

- ◆ During the base-wide recall, it is imperative that units be able to contact or account for personnel in a timely manner. People leaving the local area should ensure their supervisor knows how to contact them.

- ◆ Carry or have available a current unit recall roster.

- ◆ Show a sense of urgency and a positive attitude while preparing for the pending "deployment."

- ◆ Maintain proper operational, communication and computer security at all times.

- ◆ Know the current force protection condition and know why, in general, the FPCON changed. If people have questions, they should contact their unit control center for implementation procedures during any FPCON.

- ◆ Carry the 7th BW Phase I Information Sheet when on duty and refer to it if questioned by a member of the ACC IG team. Contact your unit to obtain this information sheet.

ALS 'impresses' inspection team

By Senior Airman
Matthew Rosine
Dyess Public Affairs

The Dyess Airman Leadership School was cited as being an outstanding program during an ALS Program Management Review Monday and Tuesday.

The review is performed every two years by a combined team from Air Combat Command and the College Enlisted Professional Military Education.

"This inspection is ALS's Operational Readiness Inspection -- a top to bottom review of the entire program," said Senior Master Sgt. Stephanie Powell, ALS flight chief. "It is incredibly important that we do well or we risk our college accreditation."

Dyess' ALS must follow and will be evaluated on the guidance published by ACC, the Community College of the Air Force and CEPME.

To prepare for the inspection the Dyess' ALS and Airman Leadership School Advisory Counsel prepared multiple self-assessments on three checklists which comprise more than 300 items.

"We have been preparing internally for this evaluation since last fall," Sergeant Powell said. "I feel that we are very ready and completely prepared for this inspection -- we have a very sound ALS program."

The ALS PMR agreed noting several Dyess programs as "benchmarks" for ALS.

Among these benchmarks, the ALS PMR cited initiatives such as student eligibility information packaging; the school's bolstering of leadership and mentorship by asking prior Dyess ALS Levitow winners to return and speak to current students; student "road maps to success" in ALS; the school's 10-year resources plan, facility upgrades such as new washers and dryers, computer systems, classroom podiums and flag sets for graduation ceremonies; and the school's newest program a "living museum" of rooms sponsored by base units to highlight that units history and modern day impact.

The combined inspection team gave special praise to the school's Test Analysis Data area under Tech. Sgt. Brian Huber, ALS lead instructor and the Instructor Credentials Folders area under Staff Sgt. Chris Rodgers, ALS instructor.

"These programs were some of the best I've ever seen," said Master Sgt. Larry Bohannon, CEPME evaluator. "They are so good, it is almost eye-watering."

Commanders must lead efforts to combat sexual assaults

By Staff Sgt. C. Todd Lopez
Air Force Print News

WASHINGTON -- The Air Force director of manpower and reserve affairs testified before Congress June 3 during a hearing on sexual-assault prevention and response within the armed forces.

Michael Dominguez told members of the House Armed Service Committee total force subcommittee about efforts the service had made to solve the problem of sexual assault within the Air Force.

"Air Force leaders have been working this problem hard for the last 18 months," Dominguez said. "Our efforts began in January 2003 (when Secretary of the Air Force James G. Roche received) an e-mail from an Air Force Academy cadet victim. Air Force leaders moved decisively to correct problems at our academy through the 'Agenda for Change.'"

The directives embodied in the Agenda for Change, which began in late March 2003, were designed to ensure the academy is a safe, secure environment for cadets. The directives came in the wake of a series of reports of sexual assault at the Colorado Springs, Colo., institution.

Dominguez also told committee members the service had launched an Air Force-wide investigation into its sexual-assault policies, practices and programs.

"Air Force assessment teams visited 85 installations including (those in) Southwest Asia," Dominguez said.

"We reached out to more than 100,000 personnel through interviews, surveys and focus groups. Even before our assessment was complete, Secretary Roche and (Air Force Chief of Staff) Gen. John P. Jumper reacted to correct discovered deficiencies."

One of the efforts initiated by the Air Force's two most senior leaders was the establishment of improved procedures to coordinate support and assistance for sexual-assault victims. Those improvements, Dominguez said, were modeled off a program already in place at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev.

He said the results of the assessment were consistent with the findings of a task force led by Ellen Embrey, deputy assistant secretary of defense for force health protection and readiness, and with data from research sponsored by the Department of Justice.

"Sexual assault covers a broader range of behaviors than rape," Dominguez said. "Violent assault by strangers does occur, but the larger sexual-assault problem involves young people who know each other. Alcohol is frequently a factor."

One committee member suggested the combination of alcohol and young servicemembers with "raging hormones" allowed for potentially "explosive" situations.

There was agreement at the hearing among service witnesses and legislators that education was key to creating a culture change within the services that would bring about a solution to sexual assaults in the military.

Dominguez told committee members that commanders would be central to such a culture change.

"Our attack on sexual assault must be a broad-spectrum campaign aimed at changing or eliminating attitudes, behaviors and beliefs that can be exploited by sexual offenders," Dominguez said. "Changing culture will require a long-term sustained effort by all of us. In the armed forces, commanders are, will and must be at the center of the change effort."

Dominguez also said the assessment indicated there are sometimes complex circumstances that make it very difficult to prove and prosecute sexual offenders.

"Perpetrators often don't meet society's stereotypes and are therefore difficult to detect," Dominguez said. "Finally, barriers to the reporting of crimes by the victims are substantial."

Also central to the hearing was discussion about the Uniform Code of Military Justice. One congresswoman referred to the code's Article 120, titled "Rape and Carnal Knowledge," as "anachronistic," saying it was no longer adequate.

The momentum for discussing the effectiveness of the UCMJ in regard to sexual assault is a bill that aims to amend Article 120 with the intent of bringing military sexual-assault crimes into parallel with federal sexual-assault crimes. The bill, titled the "Military Sexual Assault Crimes Revision Act of 2004," was introduced in the House of Representatives on April 1.

Despite claims the UCMJ may be inadequate in providing prosecutors the muscle needed to bring justice to bear upon sexual offenders, Dominguez told committee members there are law enforcers who believe the code is even more powerful than what is available to some civilian authorities.

He cited a case in Wichita Falls, Texas, the community surrounding Sheppard Air Force Base, where law enforcement favors sexual offenders being prosecuted under the military justice system over prosecution in the civil courts.

"The sheriff of Wichita Falls knows the UCMJ provides our commanders a richer menu of tools to be able to deal out justice than he has available to him," Dominguez said.

Also discussed in the hearing were the resources available to sexual-assault victims in deployed locations and the relationship between sexual abuse of prisoners in Iraq and sexual assaults within the ranks.

Service witnesses agreed to provide legislators with a breakdown of what resources are available to victims in deployed locations. That breakdown would include information about the availability of rape counseling services, abortion services for rape victims, "rape kits" for collecting crucial DNA evidence for use in the prosecution of sexual offenders and "emergency birth control."

Dyess hosts START inspection

By Airman James Kang
Dyess Public Affairs

A Russian-led team of 19 officials visited Dyess Saturday and Sunday to inspect the 7th Bomb Wing's compliance with terms of the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty.

The START is between the United States and the Commonwealth of Independent States. The CIS includes Russia, Ukraine, Belarus and Kazakhstan. START took effect Dec. 5, 1994 and will be in place for at least 15 years.

The group consisted of 10 inspectors from Russia and nine from the Defense Threat Reduction Agency. The DTRA is a group that performs inspections on CIS nations and escorts CIS inspection teams as they make inspections. The DTRA members were from Travis Air Force Base, Calif.

The inspection covers the B-1, the flightline, maintenance facilities and munitions facilities.

This is the 10th inspection at Dyess since the treaty entered into effect in 1994.

"The B-1's are inspected to ensure there is no capability of loading nuclear air launch cruise missiles onto the aircraft and that modifications done to the aircraft are still on the aircraft," said Del Petty, 7th Bomb Wing plans and treaty office.

"This inspection was a huge success," Petty added. "The inspectors found that Dyess was in compliance with all aspects of the treaty. This inspection shows the United States continues support in the reduction of nuclear arms and helps to develop trust that the United States and Dyess complies with the treaty."

Many organizations on base provided support during the inspection. "Without the cooperation across the base, the inspection could not be accomplished," said Petty.

DEPLOYMENT CORNER

Five days remain until the Air Combat Command inspector general team visits Dyess to conduct an Operational Readiness Inspection.

Here are some key facts about personnel deployment functions to inform those who might not normally be familiar with the procedure.

- ◆ Explosive ordnance recognition training is current for 15 months.
- ◆ Airmen who are a technical sergeant or below are required to process with an Air Force Form 623.
- ◆ Dog tags must have two ID tags, with one long chain and one short chain. The shorter chain will be suspended from the longer chain, with one tag on each chain. The ID tags will be compared with the member's ID card for accuracy.

TEAM DYESSWarrior of the Week*Tech. Sgt. Joel Mikesell

Unit: 7th Component Maintenance Squadron

Job description: I am the Assistant Unit Deployment Manager.

Job impact on the mission: I prepare personnel and equipment to deploy in support of 7th Bomb Wing and 317th Airlift Group missions.

Time in the Air Force: Seventeen years and nine months

Time at Dyess: One year and eight months

Family: Wife, Laurie; son, Ian

Hometown: Pittsburgh

Career goal: To retire from the Air Force -- in the very near future. The door is still open beyond that.

Most rewarding job aspect: To see our deployers depart without stress and arrive back home to loving and appreciative faces.

Favorite thing about Dyess: Our relationship with the local community.

Favorite thing about the Air Force: The overall experience being in the U.S. Air Force. Along with this country's other military forces, we've had the pleasure to have not seen a world war, witness our country's air, land and sea powers put down a peace-time enemy in the 80's; afford allies their freedom, so they may question our nation's tactics, while gaining from this new freedom of their own.

Favorite Air Force memory: Without question -- meeting my wife, Laurie.

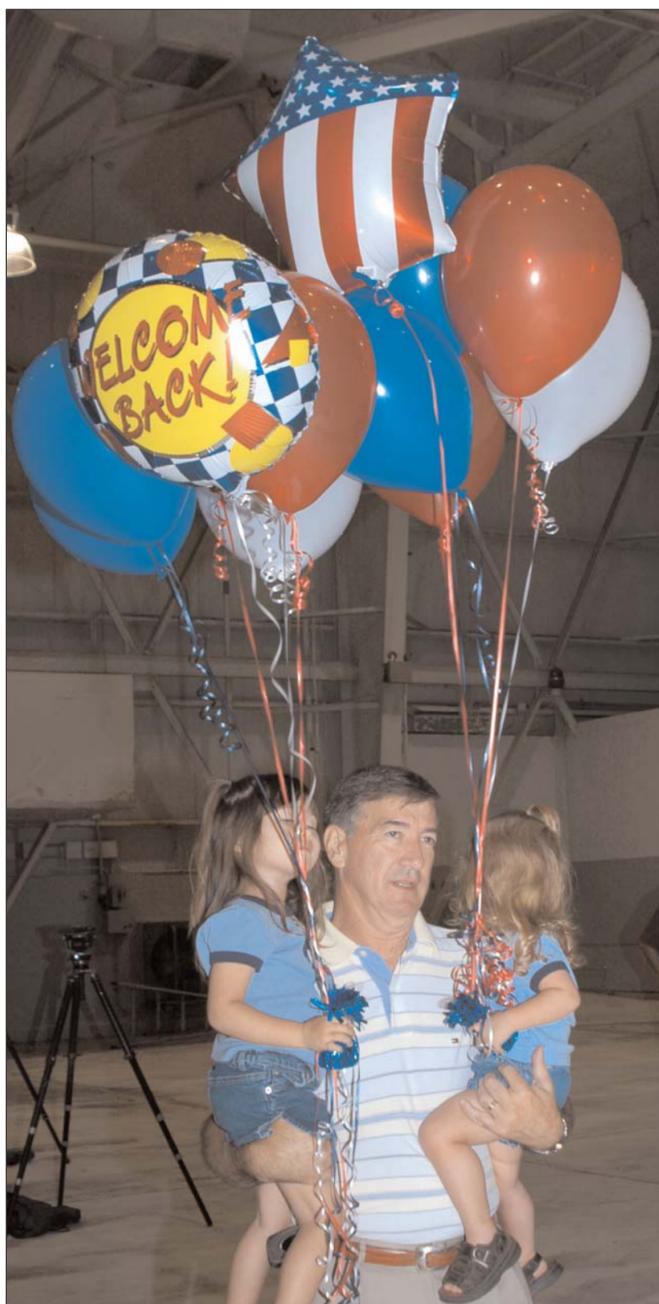

(Editor's note: The Dyess Warrior of the Week is selected by unit squadron commanders, first sergeants or supervisors on a rotating squadron basis.)

"Nevertheless, I'm proud as hell of her. She went over there and really handled her business," Sergeant Lawrence said.

While deployed to the 40th Air Expeditionary Group, the men and women combined with active duty, Guard and Reserve Airmen from more than 30 other bases to support almost continuous B-1 and KC-135 missions over Afghanistan and other areas.

"I feel this is an operation that just has to happen," Sergeant Lawrence said. "I'm overwhelmed with pride for all my military family fighting this war on terror."

All told, during their deployment, the Dyess group accomplished more than 250 B-1 combat missions and logged nearly 4,000 combat flying hours, including a grueling 23-hour sortie, the longest combat mission ever flown by a B-1.

During those missions, the B-1s dropped a total of 28 Joint Direct Attack Munitions in support of ground troops and destroyed dozens of enemy forces and resources, including an estimated $6 million in heroin. They also performed numerous "shows of force" to demonstrate their presence and vigilance over coalition ground troops in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

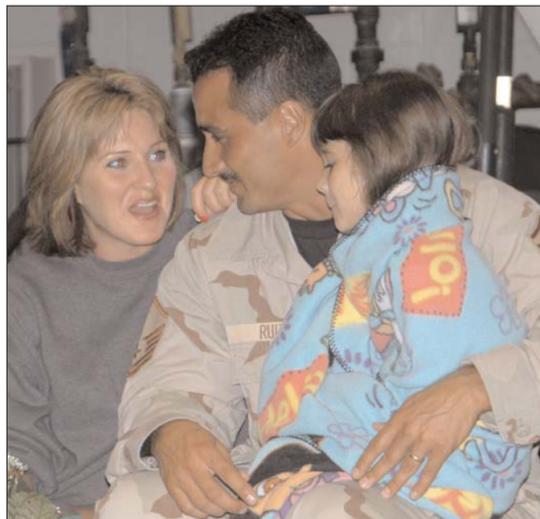

Three-year-old Donovan Osburn shows his dad, Staff Sgt. Dallas Osburn the way home Saturday.

"This group performed wonderfully and I couldn't be more proud of them," said Col. Jeff Beene, 40th AEG commander and commander of the 7th Operations Group at Dyess. "I was especially proud of the Airmen from the 7th Bomb Wing who made up the core of the group. Through the entire deployment, no one forgot why they were there or the importance of our war on terrorism."

More Dyess Airmen are expected to redeploy home to the United States later this month from supporting operations.

Master Sgt. Darrin Ruiz, his wife, Cheryl and daughter Jadyn spend a little quality time together.

1st Lt. Greg Mathis, 13th Bomb Squadron helps park family members at the base wash rack despite the heavy rain and blustery winds.

Women's softball

The 317th Airlift Group and 7th Civil Engineer Squadron women's softball team took their undefeated records to the field Tuesday. With power evident on both sides, combined with talented pitching, fielding and hitting, the game to determine early-season bragging rights looked like it would prove to be a quality one. Unfortunately for the 317 AG, the game turned out to be a slugfest, as the 7 CES women blasted 27 runs in five innings enroute to a 27-5 victory.

"We have a lot of consistent players on the team this year," said Adam Brady, 7 CES assistant coach. "Six of our key players have played together for more than four years, and that, combined with some talented new players, makes for a pretty tough combination for any opponent."

(Left) The 317 AG pitcher had a tough night Tuesday, giving up 27 runs in five innings.

(Right) Renetta Verette, 7 CES pitcher, shows the form that held her opponents to five runs. Verette, Neva Gambrell, Eva Madeiros and Kari Madeiros, have all played on the 7 CES team for more than seven years.

Air Force men place second in basketball championship

SAN ANTONIO -- The Air Force men's basketball team finished second in the 2004 Armed Forces Men's Basketball Championship, held May 22-31 at Charleston Air Force Base, S.C.

The team opened the tournament with an 81-77 victory over the Navy team. Edward Simpson, from Randolph AFB, Texas, led the team with 14 points.

In the second day of competition, Air Force won a hard fought 69-65 victory over the Marine Corps. Tyron Wright, from Whiteman AFB, Mo., led the team in scoring with 19 points.

The last game of the first round of the double round-robin tournament pitted Air Force against Army. Wright and Travis Cantrell, from Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, led the team in scoring with 21 and 10 respectively. Army pulled out a close 80-77 win.

Cantrell got the Air Force off to a strong start in its second game against the Marine Corps, scoring 24 points, going 6 of 7 in 3-point shots. Air Force won 88-74.

Wright and Simpson led the Air Force 73-62 victory against the Navy on May 30, scoring 18 and 13 points.

During the last day of the tournament, Air Force had to beat the Army by four points to win the championship.

With five minutes left in the game, Air Force led by 6 points. The teams exchanged the lead for the next two minutes, before the Army squeaked the win, 95-89. Simpson and Wright led Air Force with 17 points each.

Wright was chosen for the five-person all-tournament team. (Air Force Print News)
